Southside Lawyer Appears Before House Committee

Dr. E. Cato Drash, of Charlottesville, President of the Virginia Tuberculosis Association, and Carl Hendrick, a lawyer of Emporia, Va. and legislative information chairman of the Southside TB and Health Association, appeared before a joint meeting of the House Appropriations and Senate Finance Committees at the Capitol in support of the provision of more public health nurses for Virginia.

This is the most critical health need for all areas of health, Dr. Drash told the joint committee. Our staff nurses are in critical shortage. Public health authorities agree that public health nurses can give adequate services to about 5,000 people. In Virginia the average load is more than 9,000 population to each nurse.

We have 14 counties in the state where nurses are trying to give public health services to more than 15,000 people.

In all of Virginia less than half (36 counties and 6 independent cities) have one nurse serving up to 7,500 people and only 8 counties and 1 city meet the recommended population load.

Drash pointed out that all helath programs are suffering and particularly tuberculosis control programs. Without enough public health nurses we are not finding cases and preventing the spread of this disease to others.
